The Human Race

We all feel, we all think,
we all breathe and we all blink

So why do these wars divide us
Into separate beings,
The blood that flows through our veins may not be exactly the same
But we are still the human race

We all feel, we all think,
we all breathe and we all blink

The blood that flows through our veins may not be exactly the same
But every day that blood is shed on the battlefield
So why not try to break chaos hold, on the land we used to call our own

We can work as one to dry the tears from our eyes
And be free of our divides
But only if we try to unite
Because through everything,

We all feel, we all think,
we all breathe and we all blink
Though the blood that flows through our veins may not be exactly the same
We are still the human race
